PUBLIC RECORDS ACT

Governor Signs Budget Bill Clarifying Public Access to Body Camera Videos.

On June 27, 2019, California Governor Gavin Newsom signed into law Senate Bill No. 94 (“SB 94”). SB 94 contains clean-up language for recent changes to Government Code section 6254 regarding the California Public Records Act (“PRA”). As a budget trailer bill, SB 94 took effect immediately upon the Governor signing the bill into law.

Government Code section 6254 requires an agency to disclose video and audio recordings of “critical incidents” involving the use of force resulting in great bodily injury, or the discharge of a firearm by a peace officer or custodial officer at a person. The disclosure of a record can be delayed for between 45 days up to one year, depending on the circumstances, if disclosure would undermine an active criminal or administrative investigation.

Under the PRA, withholding of records is also permitted to protect specified privacy interests. Specifically, an agency may withhold records if disclosure would violate the privacy interests of a person depicted in the recording and if the person’s privacy cannot be adequately protected through redaction. However, an agency must disclose the record to the subject whose privacy is sought to be protected (or to their legal representative). SB 94 addresses when that disclosure must occur. SB 94 amends Section 6254 to require an agency to provide the requesting party with the estimated date for disclosure of the recording, and allows the agency to withhold the recording if the aforementioned conditions are met.

Sen. Bill No. 94 (2019-2020 Reg. Sess.)

NOTE:

PRA requests continue to raise complicated legal questions regarding whether records are public records and/or exempt from disclosure. LCW attorneys can help agencies comply with the PRA and avoid court orders to disclose records or pay attorney’s fees.

DISCRIMINATION & WHISTLEBLOWER

Trial Court Erred By Dismissing Deputy District Attorney's Disability Discrimination and Whistleblower Claims.

Christopher Ross worked for the County of Riverside ("County") as a deputy district attorney. In 2011, the County assigned Ross a murder case in which Ross believed the accused person was innocent. Ross emailed his supervisors twice indicating that he did not believe the County could prove the case beyond a reasonable doubt, and recommending that the dismissal of the case.

The case was not dismissed. Over the next two years, Ross obtained more evidence exculpating the accused person. For example, Ross: received DNA testing results indicating the accused did not commit the crime; identified a witness who implicated the accused's roommate in the murder; and obtained recordings of two telephone calls the roommate made from jail in which the roommate admitted to murdering the victim. Despite Ross' repeated requests from 2011 to 2013, the district attorney's office did not dismiss the case until February 2014. Ross believed that the district attorney's office was violating the accused's due process rights by pursuing an allegedly malicious prosecution, but Ross never expressly informed his supervisors that he believed the office was violating state or federal law.

During this same time, Ross learned he was exhibiting neurological symptoms that required evaluation and testing. While Ross was undergoing testing at an out-of-state clinic, he requested a number of accommodations to reduce his workplace stress. However, the district attorney's office either denied Ross' requests or did not follow through with the accommodations.

A few months later, the assistant district attorney sent Ross a memorandum directing him to provide a doctor's note indicating his work restrictions so that the County could evaluate whether it could reasonably accommodate him. Ross explained that his out-of-state testing center had a policy not to provide such documentation, but he offered to provide a note from his primary care physician. The County refused to accept a note from his primary care physician, so Ross never provided the County with any documentation.

After Ross missed approximately three weeks of work over a six-month period to attend out-of-state testing, the County placed him on paid administrative leave of absence pending the outcome of a fitness-for-duty examination. A little over a week later, Ross' counsel sent the County a letter informing the County that Ross deemed himself constructively discharged as of the date of the letter. While the County attempted to send Ross subsequent letters directing him to return to work, Ross did not return. After repeated attempts, the County sent Ross a final notice indicating that the County considered him to have abandoned his job.

Ross then filed suit against the County alleging a violation of Labor Code section 1102.5 and the Fair Employment and Housing Act's ("FEHA") disability-related provisions. The trial court dismissed Ross' lawsuit, and Ross appealed.

The Court of Appeal concluded that the trial court improperly dismissed Ross' claims. In order to establish a claim for violation of Labor Code section 1102.5, an employee must show: (1) participation in protected activity; (2) an adverse employment action; and (3) a causal link between the protected activity and the adverse employment action. Under Labor Code section 1102.5, an employee participates in protected activity by disclosing "'reasonably based suspicions' of illegal activity." The court noted the trial court erred in dismissing Ross' Labor Code section 1102.5 claim because Ross had sufficient evidence of protected activity. For example, Ross brought the evidence exculpating the accused to his supervisors, and he repeatedly recommended dismissing the case, at least in part, because of his belief that continued prosecution would violate the accused's due process rights and well as Ross' ethical obligations under state law. The court noted that while Ross did not expressly say that he believed the County was violating any specific state or federal law by continuing to prosecute the accused, Labor Code section 1102.5 does not require that.

Similarly, the court found that the trial court erred in dismissing Ross' claims under the FEHA. The FEHA prohibits an employer from discharging or discriminating against an employee because of a physical disability. The FEHA also prohibits an employer from failing to reasonably accommodate an employee's known physical disability, from retaliating against an employee who has requested reasonable accommodation, and from failing to conduct a timely, good faith interactive process with an employee who has requested reasonable accommodation. Ross presented enough evidence to show a physical disability, and that the County was aware of his potentially disabling condition. For example, Ross told his supervisors about his symptoms and that he was being tested at an out-of-state clinic, he missed work periodically to travel to testing, and the County placed him on a paid leave of absence pending a fitness for duty examination.

Ross v. County of Riverside, 36 Cal.App.5th 580 (2019).

NOTE:

This case illustrates that an employee need not say that the public agency employer is violating any particular state or federal law to pursue a whistleblower claim under Labor Code section 1102.5. This case is also a cautionary tale about FEHA disability and reasonable accommodation claims; a careful analysis of the facts and law is always required in this high-risk area.

WAGE & HOUR

California Supreme Court Limits State Correctional Employees' Claims For Additional Compensation.

In these consolidated class action lawsuits, correctional employees sued the State of California and various departments of the State government for violations of wage and hour law. The correctional employees alleged that they were entitled to additional compensation for the time they spent in pre- and post-work activities. These activities included traveling between the outermost gate of the prison facility and the employees' work posts within the facility; briefing at the beginning and end of each shift; checking in and out mandated safety equipment; and submitting to searches at various security checkpoints.

The California Supreme Court divided these activities into two categories: "entry-exit walk time" and "duty-integrated walk time." Entry-exit walk time is the time an employee spends after arriving at the prison's outermost gate but before beginning the first activity the employee is employed to perform (plus the analogous time at the end of the employee's work shift). Duty-integrated walk time is the time an employee spends after beginning the first activity the employee is employed to perform but before the employee arrives at his or her assigned work post (plus the analogous time at the end of the employee's work shift).

In each of the class action complaints, the correctional employees alleged the State failed to pay minimum wages, breached their contract, and failed to pay overtime compensation. The trial court divided the employees into two subclasses: (1) unrepresented supervisory employees; and (2) represented employees. The California Supreme Court addressed the causes of action for each subclass of employees separately.

Minimum Wage Claims

For the unrepresented supervisory employees' minimum wage claim, the Court first had to determine which regulations applied: the Industrial Welfare Commission's ("IWC") wage order No. 4-2001; or CalHR's Pay Scale Manual. The California Legislature delegated authority to the IWC to adopt regulations regarding wages, hours, and working conditions in the state of California. Similarly, the Legislature delegated authority to CalHR to adopt regulations governing the terms and conditions of State employment, which includes setting the salaries of state workers and defining their overtime.

IWC wage order No. 4-2001 provides that employers must pay their employees at not less than a designated hourly rate "for all hours worked." The order defines all hours worked as "the time during which an employee is subject to the control of any employer, and includes all the time the employee is suffered or permitted to work, whether or not required to do so." While most provisions of the order do not apply to state or local public agency employees, the minimum wage provision does. Under this definition, entry-exit walk time would likely be considered hours worked.

In contrast, the Pay Scale Manual adopts the narrower definition of hours worked stated in the Fair Labor Standards Act (“FLSA”), the federal wage and hour law. The Pay Scale Manual provides “[f]or the purpose of identifying hours worked under the provisions of the [FLSA], only the time spent which is controlled or required by the State and pursued for the benefit of the State need be counted.” The FLSA excludes entry-exit walk time from hours worked.

While the unrepresented correctional employees argued the more employee-friendly standard from the IWC wage order should apply, the Court disagreed. The Court concluded that the two definitions of “hours worked” could not be harmonized, and therefore, the CalHR Pay Scale Manual acted as an exemption to the IWC wage order. The Court noted that because the Legislature explicitly delegated to CalHR the authority to adopt regulations for State employees, the Pay Scale Manual, including its narrow FLSA-based definition of compensable work time, governed the rights of the unrepresented employees. Because the FLSA definition applied, the Court reasoned that the unrepresented employees were not entitled to compensation for entry-exit walk time. However, duty-integrated walk time is included as work time under the FLSA. If the State did not take into consideration this time, the unrepresented employees may be entitled to additional compensation.

With regard to the represented employees’ minimum wage claim, the Court found that they were not entitled to additional compensation. The memoranda of understanding (“MOU”) at issue specifically provided the represented employees with four hours of compensation for duty-integrated walk time. As a result, they were not entitled to additional compensation for that time. Also, the evidence did not suggest that the four hours was insufficient. The Court noted that although the MOUs did not specifically refer to entry-exit walk time, they expressly stated that they constituted the entire understanding of the parties regarding the matters they addressed, and compensation for pre- and post-work activities was one of those matters. Therefore, the represented employees were also not entitled to additional compensation for entry-exit walk time. Further, the Court highlighted that the Legislature approved the MOUs, which precluded the represented employees from relying on more general state laws to support their minimum wage claims.

Breach of Contract Claims

For the unrepresented employees’ breach of contract claim, the Court determined that because CalHR’s Pay Scale Manual controlled their right to compensation, they could only recover any uncompensated duty-integrated walk time under a breach of contract theory. The Court concluded that if the unrepresented employees performed duty-integrated walk time and did not receive overtime compensation for it, they may have a contractual interest in receiving that compensation.

For the represented employees, the Court concluded their breach of contract claim failed. The Court again noted that the Legislature approved the MOUs governing their employment, and the unrepresented employees’ contract rights derive from, and are limited to, the legislatively-created terms of their employment. Thus, they were not entitled to additional compensation under a breach of contract theory.

Overtime Compensation Claims

Finally, the Court concluded that the unrepresented employees could not maintain a cause of action for unpaid overtime compensation under California Labor Code sections 222 or 223. The Court noted that section 222 only applies when an employer withholds “the wage agreed upon” in “any wage agreement.” Thus, it did not apply to the unrepresented employees because their employment was not governed by an agreement. Similarly, the Court noted that section 223 only applies to “secret deductions” or “kick-backs,” which were not alleged.

Similarly, the Court found that the represented employees' overtime compensation claims under Labor Code sections 222 and 223 were without merit. For the section 222 claim, the Court noted that the represented employees could not prove that any duty-integrated walk time ever went uncompensated. Additionally, the MOUs precluded compensation for entry-exit walk time. Accordingly, the State did not withhold the wage agreed upon in a wage agreement. Further, as was the case with the unrepresented employees' section 223 claim, the represented employees' allegations did not involve "secret deductions" or "kick-backs."

Stoetzel v. Department of Human Resources, 2019 WL 2722597 (2019).

NOTE:

Because wage and hour claims are often brought on behalf of a large category or class of employees, these lawsuits can subject public agencies to substantial liability. LCW attorneys have defended many FLSA collective actions and can assist public agencies to limit or eliminate liability.

RETIREMENT

CalPERS Could Not Reinstate Previously Terminated Employee To A Higher Classification.

Clare Byrd worked as an Administrative Analyst/Specialist at San Diego State University ("SDSU"), which is part of the California State University ("CSU") system. In December 2014, after 14 years of employment, SDSU dismissed Byrd. Byrd subsequently filed a retirement application with CalPERS, and CalPERS accepted her application.

Byrd also filed an appeal with the State Personnel Board ("SPB") to challenge her dismissal. Byrd and CSU ultimately agreed to settle the appeal. One provision of their settlement agreement directed CSU to reinstate Byrd to a higher classification, which Byrd had not previously held, and pay Byrd the higher salary associated with that classification while CSU applied for medical retirement benefits on Byrd's behalf. The SPB approved the settlement agreement.

Following the settlement agreement, CalPERS refused to reinstate Byrd to the higher classification because Government Code section 21198, part of California's retirement law, only authorized Byrd's reinstatement to a job she previously held.

In light of CalPERS' refusal to reinstate Byrd to the higher classification, the SPB issued a decision voiding its prior approval of the settlement agreement. Byrd then asked the superior court to compel CalPERS to reinstate her to the higher position. The trial court denied Byrd's request, and Byrd appealed.

On appeal, the court considered whether Government Code section 21198 prevented CalPERS from reinstating Byrd to a classification she had not previously held. In pertinent part, section 21198 reads, "[a] person who has been retired under this system for service following an involuntary termination of ... employment, and who is subsequently reinstated to that employment ... shall be reinstated from retirement." The court, relying on the plain meaning of the statute, determined that the term "reinstate" means that the employee is returning to the specific, previously-held position or classification.

The court noted that while a reinstatement to a different classification at a higher salary level could be consistent with section 21198 if the different classification had some connection to the underlying dispute, Byrd alleged no such connection in this case. Instead, the court reasoned that Byrd's reinstatement to the different classification was merely part of a package of benefits CSU had offered in exchange for the promises it received from Byrd in the settlement agreement. Therefore, the court found that section 21198 prevented CalPERS from complying with the settlement agreement's directive that Byrd be reinstated to a different job classification.

Byrd v. State Personnel Board, 36 Cal.App.5th 899 (2019).

NOTE:

This case illustrates the complexities of California's retirement law. Public agencies should ensure they are not reinstating an employee to a different classification as part of a settlement agreement if the classification has no connection to the underlying dispute.

FIRST AMENDMENT

Transit Authority Unreasonably Rejected Union's Proposed Bus Advertisements.

The Spokane Transit Authority (“STA”) generates revenue through ads on its busses. After receiving complaints about the content of a number of ads on its buses, STA adopted its Commercial Advertising Policy (“Ad Policy”). STA only permits two types of ads under its Ad Policy: “commercial and promotional advertising” and “public service announcements.” Further, the Ad Policy expressly prohibits “public issue” advertising, which is defined as advertising “expressing or advocating an opinion, position, or viewpoint on matters of public debate about economic, political, religious or social issues.”

In 2016, Amalgamated Transit Union Local 1015 (“ATU”), the union that represents all of STA’s transit operators and maintenance, clerical and customer service employees, submitted a proposed ad to the media vendor STA contracted with to run ads. The ad stated, “Do you drive: Uber? Lyft? Charter Bus? School Bus? You have the Right to Organize! Contact ATU 1015 Today at 509-395-2955.” The ad prominently featured ATU’s logo.

However, after a delay in the approval process for the proposed ad, STA informed ATU that it had terminated its contract with the media vendor and was no longer accepting new ads until it chose a new vendor through a public proposal process.

Following STA’s rejection of its ads, ATU filed a lawsuit alleging violations of its rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution. ATU alleged that STA discriminated on the basis of viewpoint by prohibiting only labor organizations from placing ads. ATU also alleged that the Ad Policy’s restrictions on ads were unreasonable. While the trial court found no viewpoint discrimination, it concluded that: it did not need to defer to STA’s way of applying its Ad Policy; and that ATU’s proposed ad constituted “commercial and promotional advertising,” not “public issue” advertising. Therefore, the court found that STA was unreasonable in denying the ad.

On appeal, STA argued that the trial court should have deferred to its way of applying its Ad Policy as courts in other jurisdictions have done. STA also argued that it was reasonable to reject the ad as “public issue” advertising because the ads could be interpreted as a foray into the public debate between labor unions and opposition groups. Finally, STA argued that ATU’s ad did not constitute “commercial and promotional advertising.” The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals rejected all of STA’s arguments.

The Ninth Circuit noted that STA’s buses are limited public forums, which means that STA can restrict the content of speech on its buses so long as the restrictions are reasonable and viewpoint neutral. The court identified the three components of the reasonableness requirement: (1) “whether [the policy]’s standard is reasonable ‘in light of the purpose served by the forum,’”; (2) whether “the standard [is] ‘sufficiently definite and objective to prevent arbitrary or discriminatory enforcement by [the government] officials’”; (3) and “whether an independent review of the record supports [the agency]’s conclusion” that the ad is prohibited by the agency’s policy. The court applied this three-part test in addressing each of STA’s arguments.

First, the court found that the trial court should not defer to how STA applied its advertising policy. The court noted that while other jurisdictions give agencies deference, the case law in Ninth Circuit is clear and does not require deference.

Second, the court applied the three-part test to review STA’s decision to exclude ATU’s ad under “public issue” advertising. The court noted that the decision was unreasonable under the third part of the test because an independent review of the facts did not support STA’s decision. The record showed that since 2008, STA buses have carried stickers on the inside that displayed ATU’s logo and stated that “This vehicle is operated and maintained by union members Amalgamated Transit Union AFL CIO/CLC.” Further, these stickers, and other union ads that STA ran previously, never elicited a complaint. Thus, the facts did not suggest that ATU’s ads would cause conflict or debate to the detriment of STA, and STA unreasonably rejected the ads.

Lastly, the court considered whether STA properly rejected ATU's proposed ad because it did not qualify as "commercial and promotional advertising." Again, the court, relying on the third part of the test, determined that STA's decision was unreasonable. The court noted that STA's definition of "commercial and promotional advertising" is broad and promotes any entity engaged in commercial activity. The court found that because ATU's ad promotes an organization that engages in commercial activity, STA unreasonably rejected ATU's ad.

Amalgamated Transit Union Local 1015 v. Spokane Transit Authority, 2019 WL 2750841 (2019).

NOTE:

An individual or entity's free speech rights depends on the forum in which the speech occurs: a public forum; a limited public forum; or a nonpublic forum. Speakers enjoy the strongest First Amendment protections in public forums and the weakest in nonpublic forums.

FAMILY LEAVE

Governor Signs Budget Bill Into Law Increasing Paid Family Leave To Eight Weeks.

On June 27, 2019, California Governor Gavin Newsom signed into law the State Budget and accompanying budget trailer bills. One of those bills, Senate Bill No. 83 ("SB 83") amends Unemployment Insurance Code section 3301 regarding the Paid Family Leave program that is administered by the Employment Development Department. Specifically, SB 83 increases the maximum length of paid family leave benefits from 6 to 8 weeks, effective July 1, 2020. SB 83 also notes that the Governor will create a task force to develop a proposal to increase paid family leave duration to a full six months by 2021-2022. The bill indicates the Office of the Governor will present the task force findings and observations to the Legislature by November 2019.

Sen. Bill No. 83 (2019-2020 Reg. Sess.)

NOTE:

Only those public entities that have opted into the Paid Family Leave program will be impacted by this new legislation.

Daniel Cassidy Celebrates Fifty Years of Practicing Law

Liebert Cassidy Whitmore would like to congratulate Daniel C. Cassidy on celebrating fifty years of practicing law. Dan, a founding partner of Liebert Cassidy Whitmore, is among the most experienced and accomplished practitioners in the fields of public sector labor relations, negotiations and employment law.

After graduating from the University of Southern California Dan joined the workforce for a decade before attending law school. He earned his Juris Doctor degree from Loyola Law School in Los Angeles in 1968 and began practicing law in 1969 working in the Los Angeles County Counsel office. During his time there, Dan was promoted to Assistant County Counsel and gained numerous insights into the trials and tribulations of labor negotiations and employee relations along the way.

Dan joined the law office of Paterson and Taggart, an education law firm. Here he met his lifelong friend, John Liebert. However, after the tragic death of partner Mike Taggart in the 1978 PSA Flight 82 plane crash in San Diego, the firm dissolved. After this traumatic event, Dan adopted the motto, "life is short, take risks."

Dan and John formed their own firm in 1980 – Liebert Cassidy – which quickly became the top public employment law firm in Southern California. The rapid success of the firm was in part to Dan's leading philosophy on how the firm should be, as he describes, "more like a family – I wanted to make sure that our people gave their best service to clients but had a well-rounded life outside of the law office."

Building on the success cultivated by Dan and John, the firm continued to grow by merging with the Whitmore Johnson & Bolanos firm in 2000. The Whitmore firm was based in the Bay Area and was culturally complimentary to Liebert Cassidy – a critical requirement for Dan, John and the other partners. Liebert Cassidy Whitmore was born and has continued to build upon the foundation well established in both predecessor firms.

Over the course of his fifty years practicing, Dan's love of the law and his clients has never wavered. Melanie Poturica, former Managing Partner of LCW, describes some of Dan's key qualities that shaped LCW's culture.

"I learned from Dan that one of the successes to being an effective lawyer and trusted advisor to our clients is to bring my best, caring self to all client relationships. Not only does Dan sincerely care about our clients but he also knows how to work with the union side of the table and employees. His care for people and genuine concern for the public agencies he represents are the reason he is so good at getting labor agreements without acrimony and bitterness."

J. Scott Tiedemann, the current Managing Partner of LCW, echoes Melanie's sentiments, stating, "Dan's love of people is the foundation of LCW's success. Nowadays, Dan is often the first one sending and responding to congratulatory emails with apt emojis as he celebrates life milestones for our partners, employees and their families." Scott adds, "Dan is, of course, a pioneer in the field of labor and education law in California, but he is also a leader in the law business, adopting the premise of preventative law and laying the foundation for a firm that fosters inclusivity."

Dan is now semi-retired from practicing law, but continues to mentor attorneys at LCW and provide advice and support to clients. "I am so grateful that even in retirement, Dan is actively involved with LCW," says Scott, "he provides us with invaluable insights about our past but always has a keen eye towards our future."

Outside of his practice, Dan is involved in his community and volunteer work with his alma mater, USC. In 2017, USC awarded Dan with the Alumni Service Award, an honor that recognizes outstanding volunteer efforts on behalf of the university.

Dan enjoys spending time with his wife, Terri, 5 kids, 14 grandchildren, and 12 great-grandchildren. His two favorite hobbies are traveling and trying new restaurants and food.

LCW congratulates Dan Cassidy for this incredible accomplishment and wishes him continued success in his practice!
